Recently, the world has witnessed the emergence of two financial groups; fiat and virtual currencies, with people divided over the benefits of one over the other. However, the divide is poised to narrow down with the introduction of a crypto-to-fiat loan option.

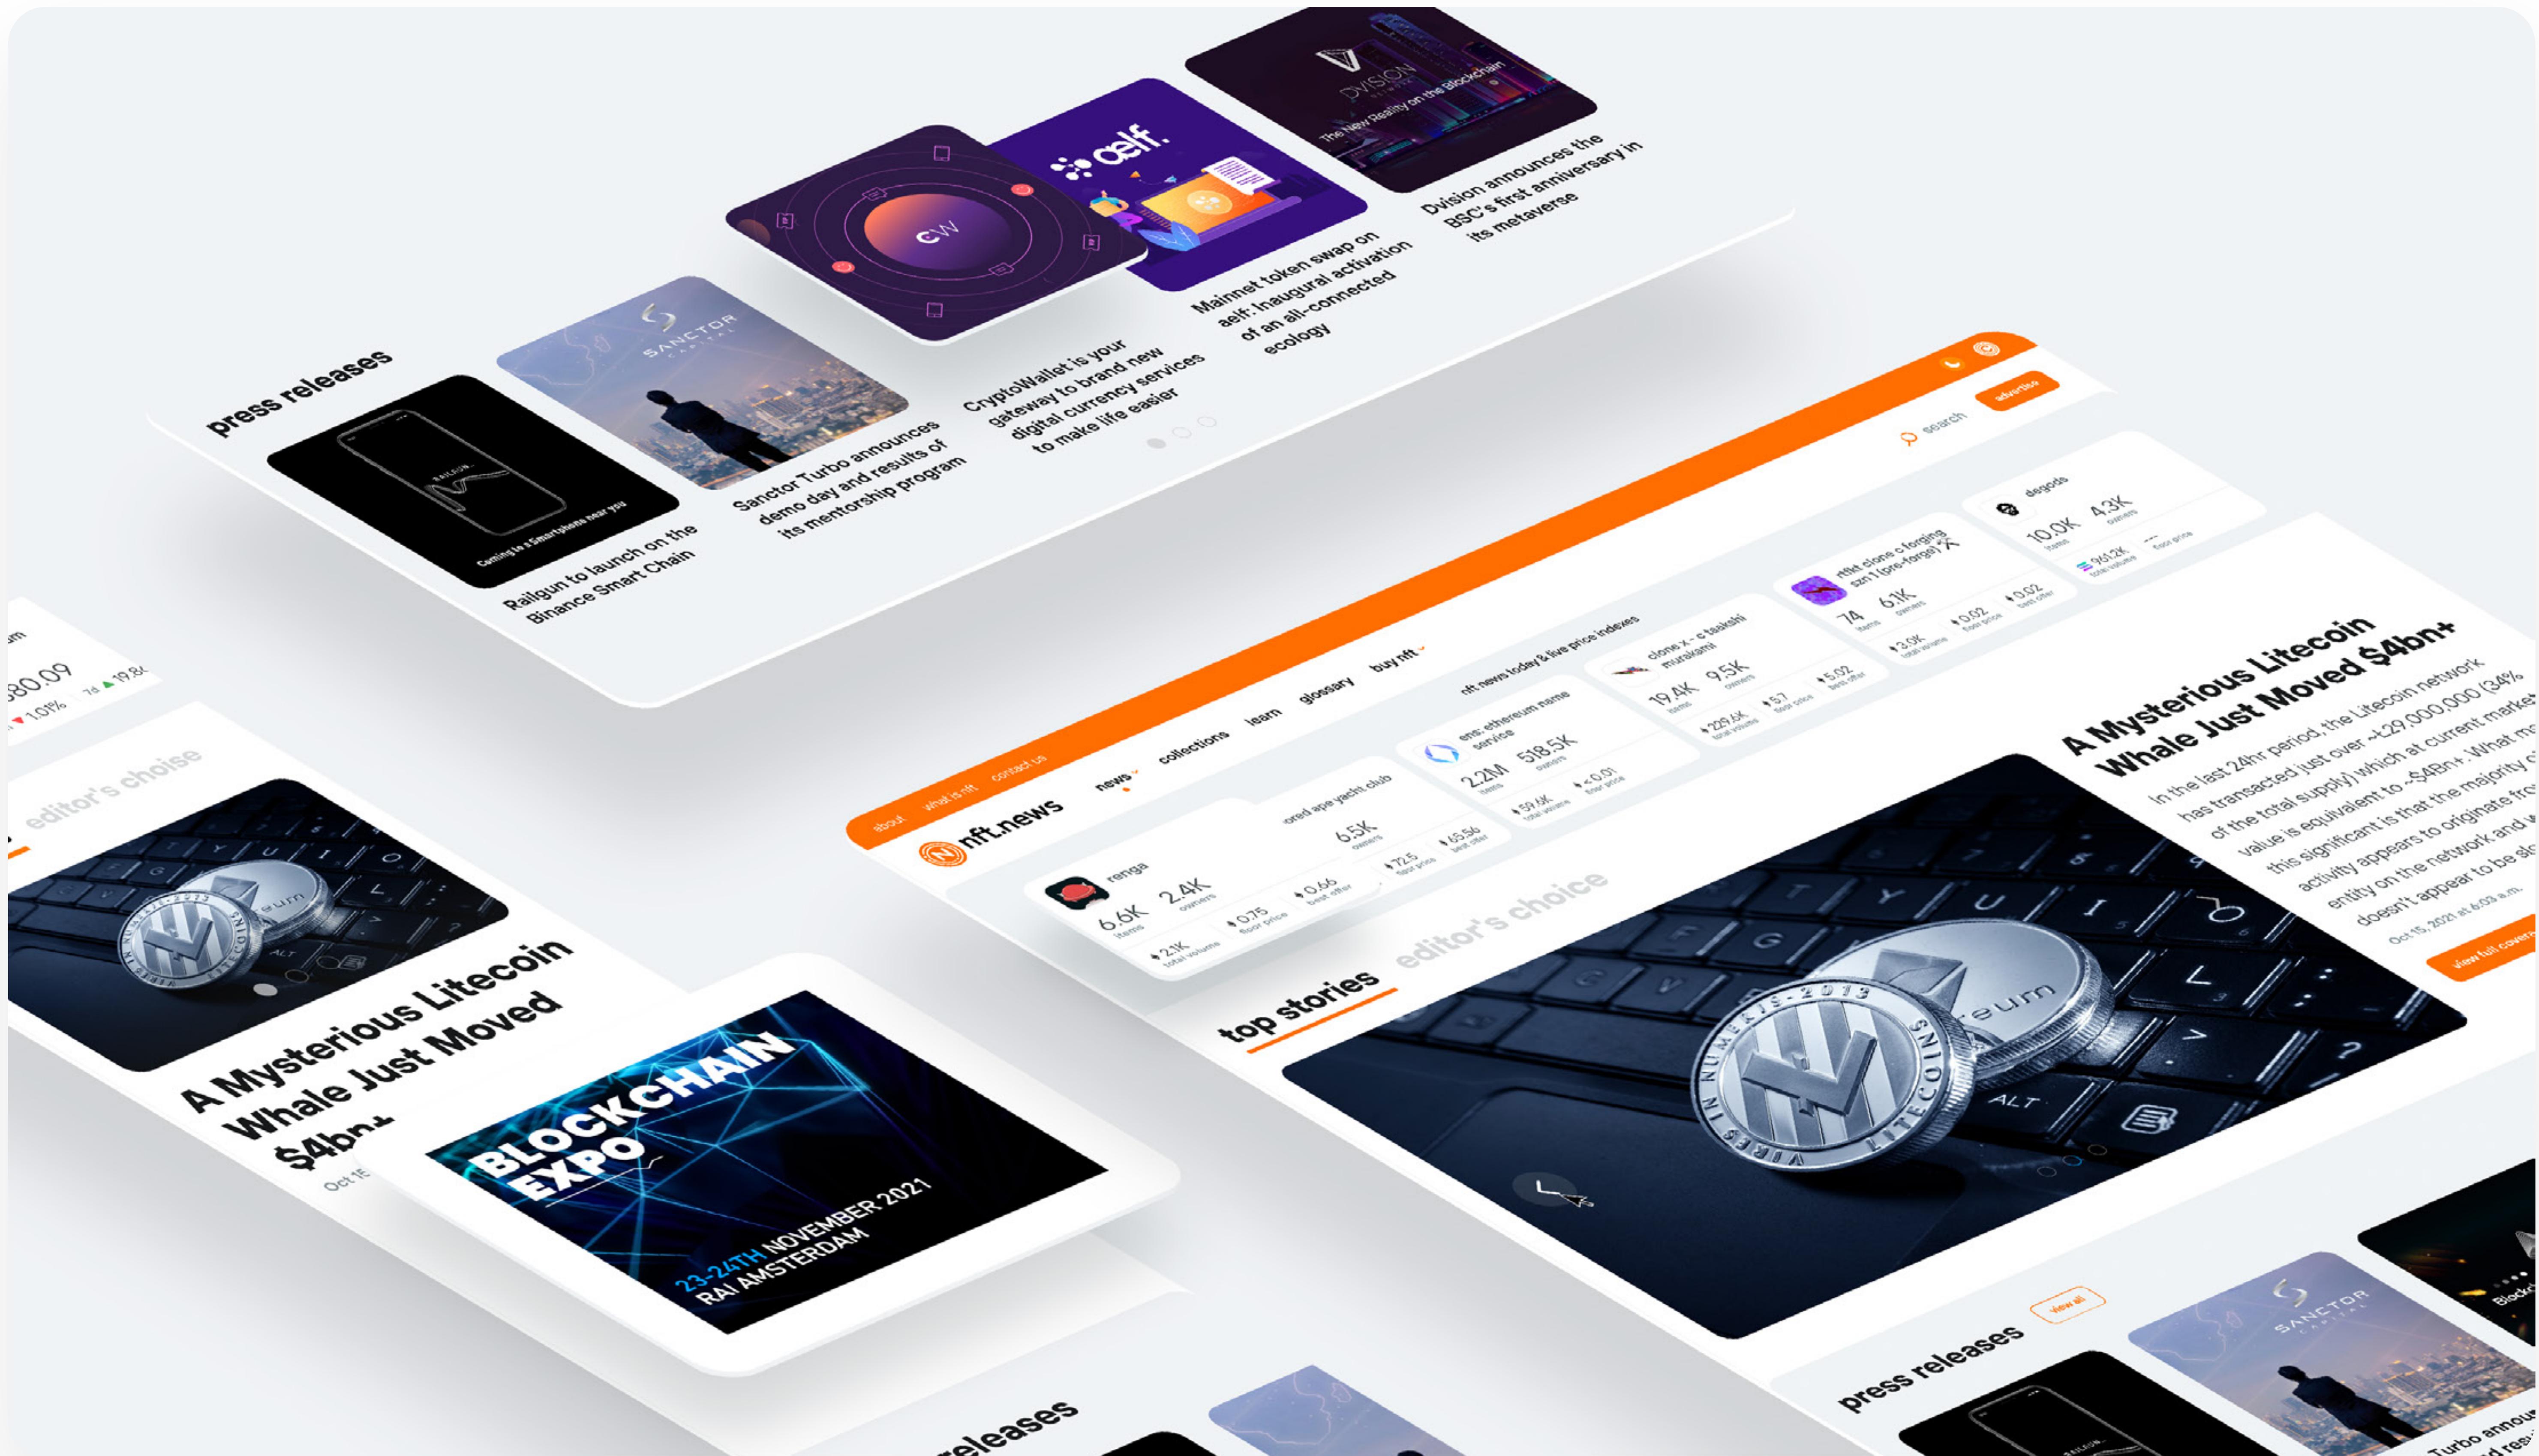

Blockchain-based lending company built to 'provide cryptocurrency lending with the use of digital assets as collateral' is now introducing a chapter that will potentially alter its current business model. In its intentions to initiate a process that allows financing by fiat currencies to their current potential users, ETHLend, a platform meant for lending cryptocurrencies, published a blog post for an alternative branch – ETHLend finally made the announcement.

ETHLend community has been requesting this addition for a long time – and it's essential as the platform has taken into account the needs of the users. The right time to introduce fiat tokens into the system is now, as the main focus for the platform is to provide a safe and secure environment for users.
